Well, here we are at the main entrance, the threshold familiar to all—from trembling Freshmen to mighty Seniors.

MAIN OFFICE

Mrs. Froberg says we'll have to wait until Mr. McDaniel gets through interviewing the boy we can just see at the desk in his office. Let's look around for a minute. Here are some of the people who keep the wheels of Oak Park High going. Miss McNutt is guarding the lost and found articles which are characteristic of every institution, large or small, while she desperately tries to silence that buzzing contraption, the switchboard. Mr. Ticktin is our business manager. See the benign look on his face as he views those children of his heart—tax anticipation warrants.

Mr. McDaniel is ready now

. . . . and has a word of greeting for us:

Welcome to our school. I am glad to see you. I am sorry to have kept you waiting but I was talking with that senior boy about his college plans. He wants to be an engineer. He has a fine record here, has met all of the requirements for admission to college, but like so many others this year, does not yet see where the other "requirements" are coming from. However, he will find a way or make one, I am sure. We take a great deal of pride in our boys and girls and the splendid records they make when they enter college or the business world. Although this has been a year of general strain throughout the land, the class of 1932 with the inspiring cooperation of faculty and students has accomplished many fine things. We are looking for even greater achievements from them as they go on. I hope you will see much of them and their teachers not only as individuals but in their group activities.

I should like to accompany you on your way, but I shall have to leave you in charge of the editors. I know they will prove very competent guides and will make your visit a pleasant one.

Thank you, Mr. McDaniel, we shall try to do so.

SUPERVISORS' OFFICE

This is where the student records are kept. Here each and every student is stamped, wrapped, shelved and catalogued for all time. Each Freshman, early in his career, receives a dread summons to a mysterious room known only as 243. This room is in a hidden corner where no Freshmen has as yet trod. Fearfully he feels his way through ghostly passageways which creak beneath his lonely footsteps, through shadowy corridors and darkened rooms, until at last in a musty cell he is arraigned before blazing, glowering lights. Just below his shoulders is placed his number (they do not fingerprint him until he has been convicted at least once). There is a quick, blinding flash and the deed is done. He has been corralled and branded for the records.

The Supervisors are in an adjoining room

Standing—Miss Blackburn
Sitting—Mr. Ketcham

Mr. O'Brien
Miss Weckel

Mr. Bobbitt
Miss Bennett

SUPERVISORS

Again the council of six meets to confer upon some momentous question which needs their urgent attention. The students are not privileged to see the supervisors in a group like this very often although all of us at one time or another, come, willingly, and sometimes not so willingly, to talk to them apart.

Miss Weckel and Mr. Ketcham are kind friends to all wavering "freshies" as they struggle through the tortures of their first year away from home.

The Sophomore advisors, Miss Blackburn and Mr. O'Brien, are able indeed to govern the growing youngsters who become too obstreperous when they learn that they have become Sophomores.

When at last the proud and haughty upperclassmen become too overbearing, Miss Bennett and Mr. Bobbitt adequately produce the desired effect of curbing their exultant natures. So by the time Mr. McDaniel takes charge of the class as Seniors, they are ready to manifest some semblance of self-possession.

On the shoulders of this group rests, perhaps, as great a responsibility as there can be in a school, that of adjusting four thousand individuals to their new and strenuous environment.

STUDENT COUNCIL

"Can you tell me in fifty words what the Student Council has done during this third year of depression?" The Tabula reporter stood with reverence and a poised pencil before the tall, senatorial-looking president, Frederic Charles Weiss.

"Fifty words for fifty activities?" he countered with a quizzical smile. "Well, the engineering of the Football Dance; giving a banquet for the visiting St. Louis University High boys; three pep meetings during the football season; furnishing guides at Parent-Teacher meetings; putting on a Freshman assembly——"

But of the quiet personnel work the Council does to help maintain the high morale of the school, Fred refused to talk.

GIRLS' CLUB COUNCIL

Just try to enter school the day of the Girls' Club Stocking Drive without buying a tag! The Girls' Club Council is collecting money to send to several organized charities, and they are going to get enough to put a dent in somebody's depression.

Here we see them in action, but it was equally thrilling to look behind the scenes, as led by Tony Adams, the organization of the drive went on. Boxes and bags, to say nothing of the girls themselves, all had to be in readiness. Were they? Well, were you or were you not relieved of a nice shiny dime that morning?

These people don't seem to mind parting with a dime (or more).

GIRLS' CLUB COMMITTEES

One hears entirely too much about timid freshmen. A visit to a Friendship Party is sufficient to assure even the skeptical that such an idea belongs with the red plush and family albums, and that the Friendship Committee of Girls' Club, headed by Jeane Gibbs, plus the freshmen girls, equals an exceptionally good time. There are games, dancing, food:—all the ingredients of the perfect party, which is precisely what a friendship party is.

There is another standing committee, less generally known, because it operates only occasionally; but the Costume Committee is indispensable when Girls' Club waxes dramatic, as it frequently does.

SMOKING COUNCIL

"Go get him," says Dave Lavicka.

In a few minutes Ed Belzer returns, bringing with him the latest offender against the school smoking rules. The room becomes quiet, casual conversation abruptly ceases, and the Smoking Council is in session.

In the chair sits the culprit; around him in serious concentration sit the inquisitors. A few sharp and pointed questions to ascertain the facts, a few shamefaced or defiant answers, and the culprit is dismissed, to await the council's decision. Will it be "nights," the black-list, or will he escape with a sharp reprimand? A truly business-like group, this, operating alone, and without faculty advice. Have you noticed how little smoking there is around our school?

Where there's smoke, there's fire.

Now for a long Oak Park to cheer our teams to victory. Here we have plenty of opportunity to develop our lungs and at the same time relieve our studious minds.

BOYS' ATHLETICS - FALL

This fall our teams here at Oak Park were exceptionally good. We won three championships and tied for the other.

Our heavyweight captain, Bob Schwartz, was elected co-captain of the all-state team. He was said to be one of the hardest driving and fastest backs ever developed at Oak Park. But of course one good man isn't enough to make a championship team and Bob wasn't the only good one.

The line, from tackle to tackle, averaged about 195 pounds. It was the hardest hitting, fastest starting and charging line in the league. Windecker, the largest man on the team was not only able to play his tackle well enough to make the all-state team, but he also was the field general for the team.

The combined efforts of the whole team resulted in the winning of the Suburban League Championship.

The soccer team also set up a record to be proud of. Besides sweeping aside all league competition they took on some of the finest competition in the city, and came through with a victorious smile most of the time. As a recognition of their merit they were given one of six invitations to compete in the county tourney. The fellows kicked their way up to the semi-finals and then were eliminated by the team that eventually won the tournament.

This year for the first time the lightweight team competed against teams of their own weight. They played teams from all over the Chicago area and came through undefeated. The team was light and fast. Captain Hilker was especially good at opening holes in the line. Bob Beeby was especially good at tearing through those holes and making long runs down the field. The two ends, Johnny Sothras and Art Black were extra fast and able to dash down the field in record time to snatch passes. All in all, the whole team was able to run circles around their opponents and finish first in the race for the championship of the league.

Our underclassmen weren't quite as fortunate as the other fall teams. They only tied for the championship. But they developed a number of good players for next year's team, one of their main objects.

Three championships and one tie for the honors! How is that for a record?

INTRAMURAL

There are some fellows that like athletics who either aren't able to give enough time to it to try out for a varsity team or for some other reason are unable to take part in school athletics. For these fellows a system of intramural sports has been worked out.

During the first semester the sports in this line are tennis, basketball, swimming and track. These contests not only provide entertainment and exercise for the fellows, but it also gives the coaches a chance to get a line on the possible material for their teams before the varsity squads begin practice. In swimming and track it is necessary for a fellow to make a good showing in intramurals to be eligible to try out for those teams. During the second semester the intramural sports are free-throwing contests, volley ball, water polo, and spring tennis.

As rewards for these sports the members of the winning teams each receive felt monograms and the deskrooms amassing the greatest number of honors receive large shields. These, along with the enjoyment and healthful exercise they afford, make the intramurals very popular.

GIRLS' ATHLETICS - FALL

Sombre, inanimate tennis courts transformed into scenes of intense activity by trim, earnest girls all with one aim—to win. Last fall bad weather set in before the tournament could progress, but this spring two hundred and fifty girls turned out, each one eager to swing a racquet, hit a ball and become class champs. There you see Jane Davis, runner up last year, getting over one of those serves in an attempt to keep the girls' tennis cup a "Davis" cup, as it has been for the past two years due to the efforts of Clara Davis, who graduated last year. And farther down are Ruth Gledhill and Elizabeth Goetsch, both former class champs. To cheer up those who meet their Waterloo in the championship tournament there is a consolation tournament. Who of the two hundred and fifty will emerge victorious and who go down to defeat? Only commencement week will tell.

Let us go across the street to the hockey field. Carry yourself back to last fall. Remember the red shirts and yellow shirts, freezing hands and flying hair? But nothing mattered if we could only make that goal. The familiar calls of "sticks," "outside," "corner," and "bully" all rang out on the air.

The tournament finally was on after weeks of constant practice. Seniors fighting a losing battle to victorious Juniors; Freshmen tying their Sophomore elders. On through the cold and rain of November we played. Finally the Juniors emerged the victors, led by the scoring of Ellen Chapman, Marguerite Schuler, Frances Herron, and Dorothy Supple.

In spite of the weather which played us many a trick we had a fine fall season with our hockey and tennis.

TRAPEZE

Quite a motley crowd n'est-ce-pas? (French) but anyway it is the Trapeze staff. If you do anything printable, they are ready to do you justice, and if you are not a celebrity, the Trap keeps you from complete oblivion by keeping you in constant touch with school affairs.

They work under the guidance of Mr. Hecketsweiler and six student editors. Then there is a funny bunch of anagram fiends called copyreaders. They decipher handwriting and compose headlines of so many letters per line. They fill the long galley sheets with interesting hieroglyphics which printers are supposed to understand. Then the editors hold a kindergarten session with scissors and paste and have great fun making cuts fit and columns balance. Then there is a bit of suspense at the printer's office when some member of the business staff finally rushes in with the cut for X's advertisement. Yes—it is an exciting game. All this goes on week after week, with some variations.

"Stick to it, fellows!"
"Aw, cut it out."

And so, on Friday morning your deskroom agent passes them out and you can find out if you got your name in "Trappings."

TABULA PUBLISHING BOARD

A turbulent throng swirls, eddies, and turbles fitfully here and there, with the center of strife near the stairway in the southeast corner of the basement. Hoarsely rising o'er the throbbing tumult are heard many and varied battle-cries echoing raucously through the corridors.

"How many?"

"Tewantay-twoooo!"

"Wot's your desk-room?"

"Two hunnert 'n' thoiteen!"

"Why?"

Thus, amid the quiet struggles of everyday life the valiant little band convenes each Friday morning and sallies forth with huge stacks of Traps to brave the clamoring and clutching of the desk-room agents.

GIRLS' CONFERENCE

Friday evening—a beautiful church—an organ prelude—a silent group of girls, as yet unmoved. The girls become enthusiastic. The power, depth and magnetic appeal of the conference speaker, Miss Nellie Lee Holt, the quietness and beauty of the church bring a thrill to each girl, and a desire for service, and a deepening of her spiritual life.

Sunday afternoon—a beautiful church—the organ postlude—a silent group of girls, but this time deeply moved! The conference has come and gone—but it still remains as a staunch and powerful brace for each girl during the busy school year.

*Miss Nellie Lee Holt, whose wide experience
made her an inspiring
and fascinating speaker.*

If we hurry, we will be in time to watch the first productions in the auditorium.

Some complicated and funny situations.

THE GIRLS' CLUB SHOW

After having gone through the yearly surprise of finding out that the Girls' Club Show contains usually more boys than girls, the school began to take notice. The play, called "Bab," an adaptation from Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel, was trebly successful because of the text itself, because of the sponsorship of the great Girls' Club, and because of the crystal interpretation of the coach and actors.

Miss Remsburg, whose wide experience has given her the knack of pointed criticism, did the job of coaching to perfection. Rehearsals were extraordinary; in spite of the usual reluctance about attendance, the cast had a grand time. Ruth Quirk, the lead, that perky little wren who keeps everyone in a good humor, is quoted as saying that she lost her temper only once during the time between tryouts and the performance—an unprecedented record for her (pure Irish as she is).

The cast believed emphatically that rehearsals should be social. In fact, so unanimous was that opinion, that they required three ripping dinner parties after the play to satisfy their congeniality. Show us another cast that did the same.

And now for some music

CHRISTMAS CONCERT

Green boughs and a cathedral setting lent a Christmas atmosphere. The music conveyed its spirit of Noel.

The orchestral numbers ranged from a dignified Haydn symphony to the fast-moving Freischutz Overture by Weber, and Tschaikowski's stirring Marche Slav. There was a melodious cello solo, and a boys' trio played Haydn with delicacy and precision. Remarkable among the chorus numbers were a Russian Christmas Carol and a piece with an antiphonal chorus by Palestrina. Then, as a fitting and thrilling climax, chorus and orchestra joined in the mighty measures of the Hallelujah Chorus from Handel's Messiah, concluding another Christmas concert notable for its variety and appropriateness.

Ada McFarland, one of the soloists on this occasion.

Yes, we study at Oak Park High! And we have plenty of books to feed the literary minded.

LITERARY TABULA

Room 126 is larger than an ordinary classroom, but there are times when it is woefully incapable of containing the capricious spirits of the Literary Tabula Staff. The spirits leak out the windows and under the door, and every person they touch becomes joyous without realizing that he is being enchanted.

Sometimes these jolly literati fall into a working mood, and it is during the occasional lapses into businesslike proceedings that the Literary Tabula is evolved. Eventful fifth periods a few weeks before the publication prove highly exciting. Entire sections emerge from folders stuffed with manuscripts;—sample covers, art work, designs, typically literary disorder everywhere. There is something of the Christmas shopping atmosphere; everybody crowding, everybody happy.

LITERARY TABULA

Suddenly, one morning, the Literary Tabula appears. Everybody concerned wears a jovial, contented look, surpassed only when the news arrives that the Literary Tabula has won honors in the Columbia Contest.

Fortunately for the juniors and seniors who do all the planning and get much of the praise, there are two other staffs that organize freshman and sophomore material. They are ambitious; they influence their friends, and they get fine results. The senior staff looks at their work and feels exceedingly grateful, especially when the printer appears, prowling like a wolf at the door.

"Look here, this one's pretty good!"

WINTER

Let us return again to the boys' field house to see what winter sports are going on.

BOYS' ATHLETICS - WINTER

Football is over. The stadium is no longer busy after school with trucks and buses leaving for the various training fields. The field is empty of players and coaches and the rooms under the stadium are strangely quiet. But let's take a look into the fieldhouse. Here is where all that activity has been transferred to. The track is being circled continually by boys at all different speeds; some sprinting, some doing nine laps slowly, and some merely jogging around. At the jumping pits boys are soaring high and low over the high jump or higher over the vaulting rod. Broad jumpers are taking their workout also, and the shot putters strenuously try to better the preceding mark. On the mats is a group of fellows going through a series of leg and arm development exercises. This year's indoor track team has set up an enviable mark in that they won every one of their meets this season. Then of course they are the suburban champions and the winners of the Oak Park Invitational Relay Meet in which there were 700 contestants from forty-one schools. The 1932 track team has put behind them a season that is going to be hard to live up to and of which the members can be justly proud.

On the basketball floor coaches are drilling players in freethrows, passes, plays, and set-ups from all sides and angles of the floor. There is lots of tedious work behind the building of a team and very few people ever realize what it means to spend so many nights after school at the rigorous schedule set for them. The heavyweight squad holds its practice from 3:45 to 4:45 when the lights get their turn. The Freshman-Sophomore team works out in the old gym which is now the cafeteria. Our heavies this year earned a tie for Suburban League Champions with New Trier and thereby kept up the good work started in the fall.

Now let's take a look into the pool and see another phase of Oak Park's athletics. There are two swimming teams, the seniors and the juniors. The discrimination is merely an age limit and both have practically the same events and the same schedule. Some beautiful diving can be seen at these meets, since some very difficult dives are executed in the optional events. The juniors this year won the championship of the Suburban League. This season's team deserves special commendation because they lived up to a rather stiff pace set them by our teams of recent years.

GIRLS' ATHLETICS-WINTER

In the old gym, in the atmosphere of hanging ropes and trapezes, well-worn horses and horizontal bars, the best of girl volley ballers fought for supremacy. After a contest of teams composed of the best players in all the classes held in the old gym, the team which was most ably captained by Jeannette Osborne rose above the others as the championship team. Those girls had to play unusually well to earn this distinction and stand ready to challenge all comers.

Soon after, this was the scene of jumping, running, dodging, underhands and overheads, valiant guarding—and baskets! After weeks of fun at practice and plenty of time to develop experts, the basketball season came to an end in the tournament week. So many girls that they could scarcely be handled at first were well organized into one Senior, two Junior, two Sophomore, and three Freshman teams. Again the Juniors proved their athletic superiority, for led by Captain Vera VonAlmen and high scorer, Dorothy Marquart, they lost no games. The Sophomore "W" team, led by Lillian Drechsler, captain, and the Senior team, led by second high scorer, Dorothy Supple, were second and third respectively.

Outside the girls' fine pool much splashing and laughing has been heard all winter—the external evidence of the fun going on inside. Junior Life Saving tests have been passed, in which Betty Williams, a Freshman, was high scorer, and, harder yet, Senior tests in which Louise Ruprecht and Marguerite Schuler ranked highest.

Volleyball, basketball and swimming—something to suit every girl's taste.

WASHINGTON BICENTENNIAL

Rehearsal for the Washington Bicentennial Play! Heroes making boners in the Music Hall—boners that were conspicuously absent in the final production on February 23 and 24.

The play, written by members of the History Department and coached by Miss Remsburg, was composed of six scenes from Washington's life, each scene illustrating some different phase of his character.

The star role of the play, Washington, was so ably handled by David Scholes, both in acting and appearance, that a future generation, celebrating the tricentennial, may have him held up to them as a goal of excellence—who knows?

The whole school was in confusion during this period, what with Washington posters all over the walls, Washington speeches, Washington radio broadcasts, Washington essays, poems, or "what have you."

At this time Andy Krantz built his model of Mount Vernon, which proved to be a profitable as well as a patriotic undertaking. For did not the State of Illinois reward him with a trip to Washington, and did Andrew not shake the hand of President Hoover, himself, in person?

When the tumult and the shouting died, we had learned more about George Washington than the fact that he had the luck to be born on a holiday, and it is rumored that many Freshmen are looking forward to the Tricentennial, by which time they may have become Seniors.

THE SENIOR CLASS PLAY

Dueling, very much in earnest, was in order, as well as such flighty but delightful gadgets as jabots, French accents—which were harder to remember than Chaucer's Prologue, flowers for the ladies, and wigs for the gentlemen. According to the cast, everyone thought that he was going to a masquerade for the evening instead of going to play before an audience of a couple of thousand. And that is the way they acted on the stage.

Miss Althea Paine, the gently charming person whom all agree to be one of the most attractive personalities in school, did much to strengthen her already admirable reputation as a dramatic coach. By some metamorphosis of psychology, she always succeeds in mixing in her rehearsals the perfect proportions of informality and seriousness. The actors and actresses enjoyed themselves to such a degree that they were almost unaware of the valuable advice and instruction which Miss Paine gives so subtly.

The play, "Monsieur Beaucaire", concerns a handsome young French prince who, dressed as a barber, went to England to escape the displeasure of the king. His superb swordsmanship gave him the confidence of Jason, and his agile tongue made him both feared and admired. Most interesting of all, he fell in love with the loveliest woman in England. The complications were enormous.

Two successful performances were given, with grand balls, swords and intrigues, and all the sophistication of eighteenth century England. Monsieur Beaucaire certainly has no reason to complain of the manner in which he was presented.

STAGE AND LIGHTS CREW

You've no idea of the responsibility that rests on the broad (?) shoulders of the stage and light crews. Suppose, for instance, at the moment of a dramatic exit that the door should stick. Imagine the consternation of the actor. Of course, he might come back and exit center, or break down the door, but what a laugh he would get! Suppose the curtain is late in closing, and the hero and heroine are stranded in a clinch, or suppose the lights decide to go "blotto."

But enough of supposing; you can now see just how much depends on this group. The crew, headed by its hardest worker, Joe West, goes straight through the whole play several times practicing shifting scenery in advance of a production—result, you wait only a few minutes between scenes rather than what might seem hours.

ARTISTS

Long hours of searching for inspiration, longer hours spent with pencil, brush, and pen; a drawing is ready. For publication, did you say? No, no, only for submission along with many others for the same coveted space in the Literary Tabula or the Annual, or for one of the many posters needed throughout the year.

"Mine is accepted? Oh, good! What? You say you want me to do it over again? Have a heart; do you know how long it took me to—all right, sure; I'll fix it. I suppose that perspective is all wrong."

And so it goes, until the finished plate arrives one day at the printer's, and the masterpiece is given the immortality that makes all the time and effort seem as naught.

BOYS' CONFERENCE

When Proviso and Oak Park High Schools meet on the football field or on the track, they are not what you could call "bosom pals." But once a year the rivalryship hatchet is buried, and the gang convenes to make and renew friendly contacts and to hear and ponder advice on subjects in which they are vitally interested.

This year, Norman Frees, Proviso's track and basketball star, was chosen President. He capably led the meetings at the First Baptist Church, which we see below, where the fellows heard Percy L. Jones on the subject of hygiene, and "Dad" Waite on a sportsman's attitude towards life.

The conference is sponsored by the Oak Park and Proviso Churches, and is under the personal direction of "Pop" Winchell, supervisor of our Y. M. C. A.

Tall, lanky, short, stubby, blonds, brunettes, red-heads, gather in 226 with determination and hope to "make" Drama Club. Grasping in clammy hands the worn manuscripts, each Junior sits nervously shifting his position and muttering unintelligible last minute rehearsals. Judges, care-free for the moment, cold-heartedly talk and laugh while waiting for Miss Payne. Old Drama Club members drift in and distribute themselves about, settle back with calculating eyes ready to snatch up take-off material for the next meeting. Miss Payne arrives; the ordeal is on!

Panic-stricken, she glances at the peaceful judges; appealingly she looks at her friends. The tension is thick enough to cut. Someone hoarsely, almost hysterically, bursts forth with, “The pit!”

The contestant continues.

“Black as the pit from pole to pole.”

The rest is easy and soon she makes way for the next aspirant. They all have their moments, their years of agony. One finds himself ending each sentence with unnecessary “s’s”. BURKE CLUB

All the best orators and public speakers belong to Burke Club, as any Lincoln Club member will tell you. Just look at that picture in the corner. That's Wells Chamberlin who seems to be having a little tiff with Otto Schaefer across the page. Right now it looks like a draw, but Lincoln Club didn't want the picture of the finish of the battle in the annual. What are they arguing about? Why don't be foolish! What are they always arguing about?

But they aren't always disputing. You should have been at the joint meeting when Burke and Lincoln both got rid of their prejudices and got together for a humorous mock trial, featuring Mr. Platt's indiscretions.

LINCOLN CLUB

Lincoln Club: the home of the Great Outspoken. Where the future Clarence Darrows and Senator Borahs get their start. Where there is continual good cheer and brotherly spirit, except when Otto Sindelar bursts forth,—“I object!” Where tranquil evenings may be spent, if Bill Slenger, Len Johnson or Jack Sugg are absent. (The members, however, never miss a meeting.) Bill Klove sometimes arranges programs in English, but those in Russian or Bulgarian are his favorites.

Assuming a more serious tone, we add, that in the early spring of this year, the club suffered a severe loss when Mr. Crawford, its founder and faculty advisor for twelve years, passed away.

FORUM

You know, Forum isn't really half so serious and pokey as it sounds! True, the girls are called Miss So-and-so, but that's only in the roll-call, and afterwards they're far from being merely solemn orators or stern exponents of parliamentary law. Of course there are always serious debates, but they get loads of fun out of perfectly absurd stunts.

Every Forumite declares that the best debate of the year was decided by two wee, white mice, called China and Japan, who sped down a table assisted by pokes and prods from Elsie Lunde and Ruth Haskins. Accompanied by shrill shrieks of laughter and terror, China skidded into first place by a whisker's length!

STORY CLUB

This picture of our erstwhile president, charming though it may be, is unquestionably misleading. Eileen Halligan may look like this as she composes one of her exquisite sonnets, but when pounding the gavel in a valiant attempt to call Story Club meeting to order, there is a gleam in her eye, which threatens every giggle.

With the secretary's blank verse and decided Bostonian accent, one is forced to listen closely to determine if someone's literary merits are being cleverly praised or whether her toes are being roasted. Early in the Spring, amid sweet peas and French pastry, Story-Scribblers convened, and real competition for literary honors began; ending with the totally unexpected victory of Elmer, Marshall and Carden.

SCRIBBLERS

Z z z z — A sound like that of an overburdened buzz-saw startles us as we approach room 312. Upon peering in, we see and hear Guy Carden reading a description of a moon-light waltz. It is so dreamy that the rest of the Scribblers have slumbered. Such is the power of realism. David Savler quickly comes to the rescue with a ripping, roaring, rattling gangster story which awakens the members and restores them to their normal state of mind.

Other contributions are numerous but neither hastily nor carelessly done. No, indeed! They are pondered over long and wearily. Witness the young man on the right waiting for an inspiration which does not come.

MATH CLUB

It looks, doesn't it, as though Ruth Hardy is having difficulties solving that problem? Perhaps she is, but you ought to see her struggle with questions involving parliamentary law! More confusion! Although these mathematicians are not like the Forumites, they have made brave attempts at law drill. Russell Crenshaw once tried to preside, but we'll let you imagine the results!

Incidentally, members do consider many interesting and valuable phases of their favorite science. If you demand verification, you might get Harold Nordhaus started on the slide rule, or John Miller on the history of numbers; but I warn you, you will have to proceed at your own risk.

NEWTON CLUB

Could it be done? From the expression on the face of John Donaker, whom you see below, everyone judged not. Well, he might try: "A man can climb a three-inch rope at the rate of ten feet per minute for fifteen minutes, and then five feet per minute for the next quarter hour. If, after climbing a one-inch rope for twenty-seven minutes, he faints, how far will he fall?"

After a long silence, our hero rushed forward with an exultant shout amid cries of "Bravo!" "A second Einstein!" "A Wizard!" Finally reaching the front of the room, he smiled condescendingly, and said, "He would fall to the ground!"

FRENCH CLUB

The martial strains of the Marseillaise come booming and trebling forth from the throats of the Cercle Française, as they are known "chez eux." These are followed by a solo rending, we mean rendering, of "Au Clair de la Lune," after which a rollicking game of "Vous me chassez" ensues.

Plays and games "en français" liven many a meeting, talks and lectures also "en français" enrich others. After each of these treats the club adjourns "aux rafraîchissements" strictly "en Américain" this time.

In their quiet moments the members can be seen poring over a copy of Molière, or is it Victor Hugo? Jane Vibert seems to be enjoying that antique volume, and furthermore she really knows what it is all about.

GERMAN CLUB

Guten Tag:

The regular business of the club meeting is over and the members await entertainment.

Richard Wickum leads an old German folk song or tells about a German musician.

Adolph Jensen, the honest treasurer, tells the story of "The Three Bears," and then moves that the club do one thing or another. Roy Levine pops up with a second. More motions are made which are all seconded by the same fellow. A cross-word puzzle, made by Thorlief Knudtzen, is given as a contest.

At Christmas, Charles Hennecke with a padded stomach and long beard gives gifts to all members. After the meetings refreshments are served, and they're not German!

Girls—don't be offended if a handsome caballero should stop you in the hall and admire your beauty with such expressions as "Mañana!", "Hasta la vista," or "Adios, señorita!" Maybe he's just a member of Spanish Club practicing an old Spanish custom.

COMMERCIAL CLUB

Commercial Club is the get-together of all the future John D.s and Henry Fords; at least that is what you would think if you could hear them discuss financial problems. Old Man Depression will take to his heels when these wizards get under way.

If, in the next decade, you should happen to be interviewing an important financier, formerly of Oak Park High School, he will probably say with that pseudo modest air, "I attribute my entire success to Commercial Club."

BOTANY CLUB

The report had spread through the club that this meeting was going to be especially good because the lecture was going to have slides (maybe the same ones that Frances McNutt is looking at). The excited buzz of conversation was quieted by the turning-out of the lights. Then, from out the darkness, came a dismal voice announcing that the lantern wouldn't function, and that the lecture would have to be given without slides.

All during the course of the lecture, aspiring young electricians endeavored to persuade the lantern to work. Then just before the rush to the lunchroom came a shout—

"Hey! Which one of you dumb bunnies forgot to turn on this switch?"

ZOOLOGY CLUB

In a room full of the odor of preserved fish, jarred angleworms, and stuffed animals, Zoology Club held its meetings. Surrounded by these familiar, but homely objects the club lived, breathed, and had its fun. And some pretty peppy meetings were held under the direction of Tom Lounsbury. "Believe it or not," these dumb lovers of all animals (no, I mean, these lovers of all dumb animals) have their family (?) skeletons. Ruth Hackley seems to be on intimate terms with one of the "critters," as is evidenced in the lower picture. Therefore, when the meetings get dry, even though they are talking about water animals, the club can pick on its bone yard for amusement.

GEOGRAPHY CLUB

Can Rose be planning a world tour? Impossible! Miss Turner says the barometer, thermometer, and stocks are falling rapidly, although the first two are quite a way behind the stocks. Perhaps that's the reason getting club dues is like pulling elephants' teeth. How those poor officers have to work! Speaking of officers: it was found that John Armour just couldn't control his yen for twirling the gavel; while the mystery of pies at every other meeting was unravelled upon the discovery that Janice Utter simply dotes on pie; then, after Edgar Stephens stepped through the scenery several times it was thought safer to elect him treasurer.

San Francisco yesterday; will they get Honolulu today, or not? A switch is turned, pencils grasped, and then a long tense silence ensues.

Jerry Dee, the helper, has disconnected the batteries unknown to the operators. Wahlberg examines the instruments carefully and finds the trouble. A faint sound, three pencils scribble quickly, a moment of writing, the turn of a switch, and three boys comparing notes.

"Eureka! We got it!" shouts Jerry, prematurely.

The future airmen learn what really makes the airplane from forward to aft. Just leave one of these fellows alone with some balsa, Japanese tissue, and airplane glue, and he'll do wonders. They say Lindy and Hawkes know their stuff, but there's going to be lots of competition in the near future.

ART CLUB

As the average citizen approaches the Art Institute, he sees before him a large building extremely dirty, with pigeons gracefully soaring over head and queer-looking people carrying awkward portfolios. To Art Club members the scene would be entirely changed. Instead of a dirty building they would see a beautiful example of early Greek architecture. The queer-looking people would be transformed into an interesting group of fellow aspirants.

The students enter the Art Institute, and immediately they are held spell-bound by the grandeur of the interior, the valuable old Masters, or the incomprehensible modernistic drawings. As another Art Club meeting draws to its close, the members in knowing tones discuss Rembrandt equally as glibly as they do Cezanne.

You know, it's funny how often a few lucky boys from Boys' Camera Club manage to attend a Girls' Camera Club meeting under the pretense of explaining the intricacies of the camera, especially Carmen Corrado and Bill Tinsley. And then there's the demonstration of the developing process in the dark-room——!

Every member turns out when the club goes to the Atlas Film Company, as a movie is given "all for nothing" in Oak Park's miniature Hollywood. Of course, every meeting is just as good as a circus when the famous Bristow-Stoddard-Trojan trio is there.

BOYS' CAMERA CLUB

All boys who are "camera crazy" join this club. The members spend their time in their beloved "dark room," where they develop the pictures.

They scraped the chemicals and films off Carmen Corrado and decided that he'd make a good president. Marshall Braun was dragged from the "dryer" and elected vice-president. Since William Harke couldn't even keep his own accounts straight, he was elected secretary-treasurer. Robert Jones spoiled so many negatives they gave up in despair and elected him business agent.

Whenever the members get too egotistical, speakers are imported to show them what rank amateurs they really are.

The Sportsmen's Club, organized by "Gilley" Matthews, the great "fisher-cist," is a legitimate means, or otherwise, for he-men with a yen for wide-open spaces to express themselves. The Isaac Waltons have opportunities to sit around the edges of gold fish bowls with hook, line, and sinker, to study the intricacies of the amoeba and other "fish" of the globe. On their recent trip up "Old Man River" (not the Desplaines), the question was raised whether the river was really deep. Quite unwillingly "Bud" Oliver and "Red" Hansen undertook to find out.

A club meeting! Nimble fingers flying! Raw materials in the process of transformation! Laughter and chatter! The following week the Sophomore corridor blooms into a flower garden of pale pink, lavender, and blue crocheted caps; products of the new Arts and Crafts Club.

MASQUERADERS AND TATLERS

Expectant waiting—sudden darkness—a moment of silence—excited whispering from behind scenes as the curtain is jerked open, and then closed again—a late actor stumbles up the aisle and through the stage door—the audience giggles at his worried appearance.

Silence again as the curtain opens on the great masterpiece—an empty stage—a crash behind scenes as an actor enters. His voice wavers at first, but he breathes relief upon the appearance of his leading lady. The love scene is carried out with gusto in spite of snickers from the front row. O-ho! What have we here? 'Tis the villain! He is slinking up behind the two lovers! Look out! And Masqueraders' marvelous melodrama moves toward a crashing climax.

MASQUERADERS AND TATLERS

. . . "The hero shrieked, gagged, and groaned while the seething, molten lead was poured onto his stomach. Don Carlos gurgled gleefully as the smell of his victim's burning flesh assailed his nostrils.

"Yo' leave mah po' man alone," whimpered sweet Clarissa, shaking her chains at the rogue. In a single stroke with his fifty-two and one-half foot mule skinner he slashed her arm to ribbons, baring the bone.

"At the psychological moment, our hero overpowered Carlos and placed him in the vacuum tank. Ah, the tables were turned! As the air was slowly pumped out and the pressure withdrawn, the beastly marauder began to swell and expand. All of a sudden—POP! and the world was relieved of its worst public enemy."

Thus ends the great continued story, "Pop Goes the Weazel." Is it any wonder Ann Seidel looks amused?

LATIN CLUB

We need no longer fear that the Latin the great Romans spoke will be entirely forgotten, for the members of Latin club will never forget the plays they give in Latin.

Practically every year a Roman meal is served since it is so amusing to compare our meals with those of ancient time. The meal consists of an egg, a cracker, a dry apple, and a pork sandwich, which is barely distinguishable because of its size.

The club expects a great deal from Newton Ketcham, because he is such a serious and thoughtful student. His oratorical manner befits the Roman toga he is displaying.

LATIN CLUB

Eleanor Skiles made a good consul because her varied humor and seriousness was interesting to the members.

Some magic tricks performed by Emery Walker, the quaestor, and Robert Stoddard were enjoyed because the tricks didn't work magically.

Jean Gregg makes a beautiful study in her Roman woman's dress, offering flowers at a shrine. If all Romans looked like that we can imagine life in Rome was very pleasant.

You would think the members were Roman patriots when they sing "America" in Latin with such lusty voices.

Can you imagine girls being so diligent that they made Roman valentines for each member of the club? This diligence shows what kind of a club it really is.

SCIENCE CLUB

What scientists these freshmen are going to be! What scientists they are now! It is a mere source of pleasure for them to perform seemingly difficult experiments.

The election of officers is carried on in quite a unique way. The nominees stand in front of the blackboard, with their names written on it, so that the voters can write their choice on the ballot. The only defect in this method is that the nominees do not stand next to their names, and the result can be imagined.

You can see the serious-minded president, Robert Olsen, watching a piston work. The girl who gives the humor to the meetings, Elaine Sundler, is demonstrating a ventilating system, but the sad part of the story is that she doesn't know it is a ventilating system!

It isn't known whether it is their good looks or the fact they are chairmen of the refreshment committee that makes Janet McKay and Lenore Feltus popular members. The refreshments are an important part of the club.

At Christmas the club gave toys to needy children, and for three months they gave milk to those in need of it. This shows that there is more than a merely scientific side to the club.

SCIENCE CLUB

To the members of the second semester Science Club, refreshments again seem most important. No wonder the girls start reducing during their Sophomore year, and probably the boys do the same thing.

The president, whose illustrious face can be seen behind the scales, asserts that he received his office because of an experiment he performed at the meeting at which officers were elected. The members of the club differ with him.

The small treasurer, Frank Lennon, has a way of writing so that no one can decipher it. It's surprising that the treasurer's books can be balanced by such methods, but scientists can do wonders.

GIRL SCOUTS

It is hard to believe a few clothes, several hundred pins, and a good deal of ingenuity could in such a short time transform insignificant high school students into the world's greatest strongman, Marge, the smallest midget in the Northern Hemisphere, and Dolly and Molly, the Siamese twins. Yet things like that sometimes can happen, even at Oak Park High. Whether the fact that they were Girl Scouts had anything to do with it or not, the feats accomplished by the tight rope walkers were really worth while. The clowns (they really needed only a regulation gym uniform to make them look funny) furnished plenty of humor.

The fun they had at their circus will long be remembered with chuckles by the Scouts.

BROOKS CLUB

A hoodoo seemed to hang over Brooks Club this semester, as every holiday which the school was blessed with fell on a Brooks Club day. When they did convene, the telephone interrupted them three times; and at the same meeting a snow storm kept away at least half of the club. Needless to say, several families of loyal members dined on the extra eats that night.

The activities of the group are by no means restricted to singing hymns and reading psalms, as the lower picture might suggest, but include teas, speakers, plays, and picnics; so you see they're very normal after all.

HI-Y

Every first and third Wednesday of the month finds a hungry bunch of fellows gathered at the "Y" for supper. It is Hi-Y just about to start a meeting.

Hi-Y is a group of fellows who sacrifice forty cents each meeting for lots of fun, a little advice,—and incidentally one meal.

There is an element of danger to each Hi-Y meal, caused by flying napkins, rolls, and sugar. As yet no one has been seriously hurt.

The biggest meeting of Hi-Y each year is the captain's dinner, held at the end of the football season, at which King Fun reigns alone and undisturbed.

These are the vim, vigor, and vitality girls. Just observe that good-looking archeress in the corner of the page. You'd never have known she was all of three feet from the target when she let that arrow go. Some of the holes are even nearer the center, but we suspect somebody punched those.

Everyone had a splashing good time at the swimming party, where some riotous races were carried on as the Gertrude Ederles, handicapped by long night-gowns, and again, with feet tied frog-wise, swam across the pool. The only real stunt the girls missed was a joint football game with Monogram Club.

"—and that, men," said "Coach" Holmes, "is the nineteenth, and last, of our series of lectures on 'Caring for Athletes' Foot'."

The applause was terrific in its volume. Deep, low, booming sounds that resembled "Haw! Haw! Haw!" were heard.

BANG! BANG! "Gentlemen, order, order!"

The solid oaken table, which had just been struck by the president's fist, lay shattered on the floor.

"Now, fellow members, we are going to adjourn for our eats: whole loaves of brown bread; quarts of milk; thick raw roundsteaks."

Ah!—Thunderous roars of applause, frantic cheering, and the famished, howling mob bore its president off to the lunchroom.

"What men!" said "Coach" Holmes, with fond pride.

SPRING

This is a good view of where they play, but let's get closer.

BOYS' ATHLETICS—SPRING

The baseball results so far have been quite gratifying and the prospects for the rest of the season are very good, too. So far the team has only lost one league game, and they have beaten some of the best teams in the city.

Quite contrary to expectation, a good staff of new pitchers was discovered this year. Two of the best are Wally Cutshall and William Cheevers. They have been out-pitching all their opponents so far, and with the support of the rest of the team only two games have been lost, and one of those to a school not in the league.

Captain Sothras, a veteran of four years, is playing two positions well. He plays out in right field usually, but can catch when necessary. Myers, another young veteran, is holding down his position at first base. A new man from out of town, Frenchy White, is knocking them down at shortstop.

The tennis team is also coming along in great style. The outstanding member on the squad is Norm Bickel. He ranked high in the state last year and is every bit as good this year, if not better. They haven't lost a match yet this year and one of their opponents was Parker, a city school which has one of the best players in the country on their team. The league competition hasn't started yet, but next Saturday the district meet is to be held.

To quote Bob Quayle, one of the prominent members of the team, he can't see how we can lose a single match. This gives us something to look forward to and judging from their past performances we are inclined to agree with Bob.

After a very successful indoor season, the track team is out in the open now, and judging from all indications they ought to win the state championship. Our relay team is still about the fastest one in this part of the country, and Captain Herman is just as fast as ever and that's saying something!

Of course we are used to exceptionally good track teams at Oak Park; so this year's team is no novelty, but it is living up to all the standards previously set.

GIRLS' ATHLETICS—SPRING

Spring! Outside again and all the good old spring sports. Archery wherever we can find a windowless space and baseball on the side field.

Archery is a relatively new sport around our parts but has been having reasonable success. Those who hit the bull's eye most often were Dorothy Boyter, a Junior, Geraldine Rainey, a Senior, and Elaine Sundler, a Sophomore.

This year, for the first time, the girl followers of the king of American sports had a chance to play to their heart's content. And they certainly did take advantage of it. There were two hundred and seventy-five girls who were divided into eighteen teams. These girls can give their thanks to Atalanta which sponsored the sport and had at least one of its members on every team to take charge. Rain or shine, baseball is every Monday. We can go out on the side and watch them play now. Swing! And she missed. Better luck next time.

Nothing but fruit between meals, in bed at 10 o'clock, walking and all sorts of exercise, low heels and broad-toed shoes, all have a special significance for a group of girls who work diligently week after week to keep training rules and win points. These are the girls who are working for their point awards. Then just as they think they have won their goal—a 1200 point local award, 1600 point state award, or even 2000 point state emblem—have successfully passed the critical scrutiny of teachers searching for flaws in sportsmanship, they are apt to have the coveted award snatched away by poor posture, for that too counts for these significant rewards, of which the owners are truly worthy.

These honors are a fitting climax to a year of fun and exercise enjoyed by so many of our girls.

BAND

A football game, however exciting, would seem a less memorable affair without the customary songs and marching. You get an undeniable feeling of pride and elation when the band can do two things at once. It can fan the flame of excitement by its spirited music, and it can make excellent figures on the field.

Its versatility is one of its attributes. From the somewhat boisterous pep meetings and football games, the band turns to the Christmas Concert, May Festival, teachers' meetings, and assembly programs where it demonstrates well-trained ability.

Pep and precision.

ORCHESTRA

Crash! Bang! Another baton has met its doom.

"Will you clarinets get that solo right! Look here. Da da—dum da da—de dum. Now, try it again. Much better! All parts this time."

And so it goes. The orchestra may be heard practicing dutifully every second period, resulting in two splendid concerts each year, one at Christmas, and one in the spring. It also accompanies all dancing in the Class Play, be it tarantellas or gavottes, and furnishes musical diversion between acts.

Last Christmas Mr. Embs was presented by the members of the orchestra with some guaranteed non-breakable batons, due to his fondness for demolishing them. We don't say that this is the cause, but—he does get results, results that professional organizations might well envy.

"Just once more and I'll let you go."

JUNIOR COUNCIL

With one gust of brilliancy from the Junior Council the academic airs are swept out of our educational portals. A modern miracle has taken place—the Junior-Senior Frolic.

Cries from peanut venders, popping of balloons, and the tap-tap of clowns' feet reach our ears from the lower corridors. In contrast to this carnival scene, with its cheering from delighted onlookers, is the transformed cafeteria—a modern ballroom. Swaying couples encircle the room following the syncopating music. Thrill seekers go to the movies in the auditorium. The more athletic-minded find a well-worn path leading to the girl's gymnasium where competition is high between the tapping of ping-pong balls and excited voices of high-spirited Juniors and Seniors. And on top of it all, the good old "meller-drammer," Uncle Tom's Cabin.

You may think that buying school books is a "stale, flat, and unprofitable" task. With this conviction thoroughly in mind consider the relative joys of selling them, and you may begin to value the efforts of the Sophomore Girls' Council.

Receiving, labeling, registering, selling used books is a prodigious task—the actual selling being perhaps the most exhausting. And finally, after the more obvious work is completed, the council has to begin returning the proceeds from the hundreds of books sold. Then, at least, if not at any other time, these Sophomores get a few appreciative words.

Fifth periods three times a week, nights after school, and Saturday mornings must all be sacrificed to the cause.

Each of the eight editors has the full responsibility for one complete section, coöperating, however, with the others on the general theme and planning of the book. Mr. Kimball supervises, and when everything seems to go wrong at once,

PHOTOGRAPHIC STAFF

There is a floundering under the black cloth behind the camera, and eventually Carmen Corrado's head appears. He looks you over interestedly and a cynical smile spreads over half his face as he sees how well you have succeeded in getting out of the position in which he once had you. If any other photographic staffers are present, they will doubtlessly be susceptible to your charms and reply with poorly concealed titters. Then come the adjustments. "Twist your neck this way a little, please—Arch your right eyebrow a little more—Curl your third finger in the other direction and look pleasant—Hold it, please!"

Quick! Snap it.

And now for the big event of the year.

NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

The room is hushed and on the stage we see a tableau: two girls in shimmering blue and pink representing Scholarship and Service; two boys in academic gowns, Character and Leadership, grouped about the emblem of the National Honor Society.

The statue-like figures come forth and tell of the ideals which they symbolize. Holding their torches high, they form an arch.

NATIONAL HONOR SOCIETY

From both sides of the shadowy stage come the newly elected members carrying unlighted tapers. As each one passes through the arch he lights his torch from the gleams of Character, Scholarship, Leadership and Service. His candle flickers with the shaking of his nervous fingers. He passes to his place.

With uplifted torches, the members solemnly pledge themselves to uphold in word and deed the high ideals of the National Honor Society.

MOCK ELECTION

MOCK ELECTION

Last year the editors chose the school seal with its Greek motto, which translated, means "the best" or "the highest," as a fitting symbol to head this section in which were placed a group of seniors whom the class chose as outstanding in their various ways. It seemed so proper that we are doing it again. Maybe it will become a time-honored convention. If so, good, for it will be a worthy one.

ANTOINETTE ADAMS

A leading girl in the class for four years. Tony has been outstanding in popularity and achievement.

MARY AGNEW

Truly representative in the lines of dramatics and school activities. She is well poised and individual.

HARRY ARMSTRONG

A good business manager and executive. We expect him to lead the country out of the present depression.

BETTY BOBBITT

She leads in scholarship and is well suited for the many responsibilities bestowed upon her.

EDWARD BORGERS

This writer of vigorous and picturesque historical dramas can almost make the blood curdle. Perhaps he is our future Edgar Allan Poe!

GUY CARDEN

A subtle poet who writes of emotions felt only by a few and which fewer are able to express.

WELLS CHAMBERLIN

A quiet and efficient worker who stands highest among the boys in scholarship.

MORRIS CLARK

A brilliant individual who lends himself to any role—he is our best actor.

GEORGE CLIFFORD

Voted the best looking boy in the class; George excels in providing amusement.

Here, then, are those who because of their particular accomplishments have been elected by our own class as "the best" or "the highest." Some excel in leadership, others in their chosen field of activity, and still others have personal characteristics which assure their prominence and place among this group. We have honored each and every one of them because they possess qualities which we consider important and worthwhile.

PRISCILLA ELMER

One of the intelligentsia who reads Carlyle and writes marvelous stories and poems whenever she gets an inspiration.

ELLEN ERICKSON

Ellen is always doing the ridiculous, but she doesn't stand alone, for her ability to lead is magnetic in drawing friends about her.

JANE GROUNDS

A busy girl whose interests range from sports to journalism. She does everything with vigor and does it well.

EILEEN HALLIGAN

A green-eyed, dark-haired Irish lass who can write prize winning sonnets and clever prose in which her unusual sense of humor is revealed.

HUGH HARRIS

Hugh is a "jack-of-all trades"; this, and his adaptability have made him a popular leader of the class.

PAUL HENNIG

When a clown, a wielder of the gavel, or an editor is needed, get Paul; he'll do anything from leading a cheer to pasting dummy.

RANDALL HERMAN

In our midst we have a record-breaking athlete and a fine student with high ideals.

LESTER JACOBS

Les is a genial senior whom everyone likes because he's a "regular feller" and hates pretences of any sort.

LEONARD JOHNSON

Chosen the most popular boy. Len has proved his ability as a leader in athletics and in class activities.

GLEN JORGENSEN

A jolly good fellow who combines successfully athletics and studies.

MARIAN KLEIN

Marian's winning smile and good judgment are the secret to her success.

HEDWIG KOEPKE

An attractive senior whose general capability has kept her prominent in school affairs.

DOROTHY KRETZER

In choosing the best looking, some people prefer blondes, but the class of '32 prefers this striking brunette.

ELSIE LUNDE

The most versatile girl; one who adds pep to every occasion.

PIERRE MARSHALL

Pierre's field of writing is unlimited; his ability to interest all of us has made him our best writer.

JANE MCLALLEN

Sweet—that's what describes Jane to a "T", and she is so genuine that everybody loves her.

BETTY OLSON

A vivacious young lady with unusual musical talent and dangerous dark eyes.

HORACE PERRY

Here is a quiet and frank boy who is becoming well known for his good looks and dramatic skill.

ROBERT QUAYLE

Peppy—and he makes others feel the same way; that's why he led our cheers.

LOUISE RUPRECHT

Her charm, her good nature, and her efficiency make her an extremely attractive and valuable person.

OTTO SCHAEFER

Otto's quiet manner and dignity camouflage his real love for fun.

ROBERT SCHWARTZ

Bob's all-around athletic ability was climaxed by his being chosen co-captain of the all-state football team.

ALICE SLINGLUFF

A little girl whose social qualities make her a desirable member of every group she works or plays with.

MARGUERITE SPELMAN

Margie is our best artist, and she's ambidextrous, too! We only wish we could have half the ability.

SUE STURLA

Here is a girl who has the ability to make people work and really like to do it, too.

JANE VIBERT

A really chic young lady of rare "savior faire"—our most outstanding dramatic artist.

PATRICIA WALKER

We can't help knowing Pat, for besides being jocular in her ways, she has a serious side and has proved an able leader.

FREDERICK WEISS

A tall, dignified senior whose general ability gives him the occasion to turn down more positions than most people can get.

JOE WEST

How can anyone be so versatile, so efficient, and so energetic? You had better ask Joe, for these qualities have enabled him to do the most for the school.

RICHARD WICKUM

A leading musician and master of the piano—Dick has concentrated upon his main interest.

ELEANOR YOUNG

Nellie can be relied upon to supply what is needed at the moment, whether it be work, sympathy, or comic relief.

THE INSTANT

This is the moment, the unblemished hour
Long sacrificed to immortality.
They who have watched it know its subtle power
No better for their vigil. Carefully
They wait its advent, see it go—untrained
By what is past; they are forever blind
To instants. Some there are who might have gained
Its puissant glory, but they looked behind.
This hour is ours; through us it lives or dies,
Living forever. In us the strength to shape
Or ruin, dormant, wakened, restive waits
To meet the moment of its swift escape.

We may not judge by what shall come. Our eyes
May scan the compassed past and from it claim
The future. This we know:—what we do now
Shall be our exultation or our shame.
What shall be rests upon what is. This word,
This gesture forms the future, not the past;
These deeds are seen, these utterances heard.
It is ordained: this moment shall remain.

EILEEN HALLIGAN

YEP, THAT'S THE HIGH SCHOOL

"'Mornin', sir. Yep, that's the high school, down 't the next corner, there. Oak Park an' River Fores' Township High School. A mighty fine insteetution—mighty fine.

"Big place, too! Lan' sakes, I reckon ther's close on to ten thousan' a-goin' to it. My gran'daughter, Cynthy, could tell you. Yep, she's a-goin' to the high school. In her junior year, an doin' mighty well, too—mighty well. Pret' nigh made the Honor Roll las' month—kep' off by zoo-ogrophy er somethin'.

"Oh yes, I take a heap o' int'rurst in the school doin's. You see, sence I come here fr'm Ioway six years ago, to live with my daughter Marthy, I ain't had very much to do, 'cept fer putterin' 'round' the lawn here, er tendin' to the flowers. An' so I got plenty time to see what's a-goin' on. Yep, eighty year though I be, I reckon my eyesight ain't total gone, an' as fer walkin'—Lan' sakes!—I kin outwalk my son-in-law, Joe, any day, spite o' his golf-playin'!

"I never was much of a feller fer talkin', though—reckon I was more cut out fer a man o' action. When I was a youngster I spent mos' o' my time with the plowin' an' sech, but ef I'd o' had the chance to play football, like some o' these high school lads, I reckon I would o' made a name fer myself! Heh, heh, heh!

"Say—you don't happen to have no tobaccy, do you, stranger? Why—thanks! I ain't no seegar smoker, but I kin tell that this here is a mighty fine weed—mighty fine. I reckon I'll have to smoke it outside somewheres, though—my daughter Marthy 'd skin me ef she caught me in the house with it. That's one thing I cain't nowise unnerstan' 'bout wimmen—they're allus a-fussin' roun' the house so's a body cain't have no peace at all.

"What was we a-talkin' 'bout? Oh yes—the high school yonder. Well, as I was a-sayin', them football games is a mighty excitin' spectacle—mighty excitin'. I went to ever' one o' the home games, las' season. My gran'daughter, Cynthy, she got me one o' them season tickits fer my birthday. Eighty year old, but spry as a chipmunk! My daughter, Marthy, she give me this necktie, here, an' I reckon it's a purty fine piece o' goods, too.

"Well, sir, them Oak Park boys, they licked ever' other team in th' league. Beat anythin' I ever see, the way them boys could run an' dodge an' wrassle with that li'l football. One o' them backfield fellers 'd git the ball, 'n 'en he'd kin' o' run over to one side like this—kitty-cornered—'n 'en he'd go a-plowin' through thisaways, an' 'en—ugh! Heh, heh, heh! I clean fergot my rheumatiz. It sot in las' fall, an' I cain't do nothin' with it, nohow.

"Well, as I say, that class has 'bout the bes' football team I ever see. An' that goes fer th' basketball fellers an' th' runnin' an' jumpin' team an' the baseball players an' all. An' ef it comes to sayin' it, I reckon that whole class this year is a mighty fine bunch o' kids—mighty fine. Heh, heh, heh! Big thing fer them—graduatin' fr'm high school. Reckon they figger they're purty big folks now. An' I don't know as I blame 'em fer it, neither.

"Bein', as I say, a kin' o' shif'less ol' feller, 'thout nothin' much to take up my time, I make a sort o' study o' them kids that go to the school. It's jes' as intrustin' as it kin be—kind o' like watchin' a flower er a plant growin'.

"Lots of 'em passes here in the mornin', an' at lunch time, an' in the afternoon, so I git plenty chance to see 'em. Course, I cain't git to really know very many of 'em, but I kin judge a lot fr'm their looks, an' fr'm what my gran'daughter Cynthy tells me. She takes the high school paper, th' 'Trapeze'. That's a Greek word meanin', a tablet bearin' a re-cord of e-vents. I allus read it Friday nights when Marthy an' Joe goes out to play bridge. Ther's lots o' int'rustin' facks in th' 'Trapeze', but I allus reads the 'Air Line' first. That's the joke collum.

"They got a section on th' back page 't I allus like t' read, too. Called the 'Spot Light'. It has pitchers o' the outstandin' students, an' tells somethin' 'bout what they've done. I sort o' like to predick the ones that'll git into the 'Spot Light' from what the other parts o' the paper says 'bout 'em, when they're juniors, er sophymores, er freshmen. Mos' o' the ones I had figgered out got in it this year. Course, ther's allus more outstandin' students than ther' is time to print 'em all down proper.

"Take this here class, fer instance. Back three er four year ago, I begun to figger out which ones 'd be printed into the paper. I'd read somethin' 'bout the things one o' them kids was doin', an' then I'd say to my daughter Marthy, I'd say, 'Mark my word, Marthy, here's a girl er boy 'ts goin' t' be somethin' in th' school in a couple o' year!' An' this year here it was, sure as I'm a foot high!

"These graduatin' seniors this year had one thing that the kids 'fore 'em didn't have. The gymnashium. Yep, it was completed back in 'twenty-eight, when these kids was freshmen. That gymnashium, er Field House, they calls it, cost nigh on to a billion dollars, I reckon. It's got some beams in it that's the bigges' in the state. I used to go down an' watch them fellers when they was a-buildin' it—mostly furriners, they was. Couple times I give 'em some good advice 'bout how to go 'bout th' buildin', an' they was purty grateful fer it, I guess, though I couldn't unnerstan' their furrin talk. I helped to buil' our ol' barn down home—it was th' secon' larges' in th' county. My pappy, he was allus a-goin' to put a steeple onto it so's it 'd be the larges', but he never got 'roun' to it, I reckon.

"Kids startin' into high school is pretty scairt an' nervous th' firs' few days, fr'm what my gran'daughter Cynthy tells me. I seen some o' this year's graduatin' seniors in a play down to th' school—'Monseer Bocare'—an' it was jes' as good as a movin' pitcher. Kin' o' hard to 'magine them bein' scairt by the school.

"I mos'ly allus git to th' plays they give—heh, heh! I 'member one they put on las' fall. Name o' 'Mab' er 'Bab' er somethin'. Laugh? I pret' nigh bust a rib! It was good as gol' to see the smooth way them kids waltzed 'roun' that stage, an' funny—! Heh, heh, heh!

"They had a good show fer the Bitencennial o' the birth o' Washin'ton, too. I had a bad col' 't th' time, an' Marthy wanted t' keep me in bed, a-drinkin' hot lem'nade, but heck!—my gran'daughter Cynthy was a-goin' an' th' show was free, so we went t'gether. Ther' was a boy in that play 't was as dead a ringer fer George Washin'ton as I ever see. Lan' sakes!—he even had white h'ar!

"'N 'en o' course, that one, 'Monseer Bocare,' I was a-tellin' you about. That play was 'bout as excitin' as a b'ar cub in a bee-hive. Ther' was that much sword-fightin' an' scufflin' in it that I 'clare I was jes' a-waitin' t' see one o' them git stuck! Well, sir—ther' was some got scratched, but nothin' much to hurt. I los' my hat durin' th' show that night, an' folks was a-thinkin', I guess, 't I was a dern ol' fool fer crawlin' 'roun' on the floor thataways, a-lookin' fer it!

"Ther's a heap o' things t' do in that school, 'sides school-work. They got 'bout a hunderd clubs, I guess. Ther's the Drammy Club, fer actin' an' sech, an' th' Linc'n an' Burke clubs fer oratin' an' arguin', an' heaps more besides.

"An' ef them kids ain't havin' club-meetin's er plays, they got some kin' o' dance er party. Ever' year, 't th' en' o' th' football season they have a big dancin' party. They 'lect the nex' year capt'in o' the team at the dance, my gran'daughter Cynthy tells me. An' then ther's a big party fer all th' seniors that's give to 'em by th' juniors ever' spring. This year they give 'em a sort o' carnival, with movin' pitchers an' all. I read 'bout it in the 'Trapeze,' an' then o' course, my gran'daughter Cynthy went to it, too. Laws! My daughter Marthy like to brung down th' roof when Cynthy didn't git home till two!

"Well sir—I 'spect you think fr'm all this talk that all them high school kids does is dance, er play football, er hold club-meetin's, but it ain't so. Ther's a heap o' mighty smart boys an' girls a-goin' t' that school—a might big heap. Lan' sakes, they got a great big silver cup fer the one with th' bes' marks on his 'port card fer all th' time he's there, an' ther's allus plenty of compytition fer it, too.

"I reckon I tol' you my gran'daughter Cynthy pret' nigh got on th' Honor Roll las' month? She would o' done it, only she didn't do so good in zoo-ometry, I guess it was. Marthy was purty mad 'bout that, too, but heck!—'you cain't 'spect ever'body t' be perfec', I says.

"'Is that so?' she says, 'well how do you 'spec' she's ever a-goin' to git in the Nation'l Honor Society?' she says.

"'Don't you worry none 'bout that,' I says. 'Them Honor Society kids is picked fer four things, an' bein' a good scholar is only one-fourth o' them things,' I says. 'An' you take this graduatin' class now,' I says, 'why they ain't no doubt in th' worl' that them kids 'll be successes, Honor Society or not,' I says. Well, sir, I reckon that shut her up jes' like a dead clam.

"Yep, that's the high school, an' I kin see my gran'daughter Cynthy a-comin' home fer lunch now. I reckon I better be gittin' back t' my grass-cuttin'. I cert'ny am glad to o' met you, sir—I like to hear a man that's a intrustin' talker, an' I hope I'll be seein' you agin some time.

"All right, Marthy! I'll be there direckly! Good-bye sir, an' I'll—All right, Marthy!—Lan' sakes!"

PIERRE MARSHALL

" 'Tis an ill wind that blows nobody good." It is with a real sense of pleasure that we welcome to these pages the Literary Tabula. Faced with an uncertain financial situation, they were unable to put out their second issue. What was tragedy to them became a real opportunity for us. We are glad and fortunate indeed to be able to give a permanent place to the literary output of our best writers. It seems like old times, when the last issue of the Tabula, a magazine combining the features of both the Literary Tabula and the Senior Annual of the present, was always the Year Book. We are also very grateful to members of the Literary Tabula Staff who generously contributed many of the write-ups for this volume.

"NOR SHALL DEATH BRAG—"

EILEEN HALLIGAN

Credence

Yours is the timelessness that other men
Cannot possess, belonging all to earth,
And time, and earthly death. One evening when Great streaks of lightning measured out the girth
Of space, and clouds were hurled, as flakes of thought
In angry minds, there was some half-said word
That spoke of power, fury—too soon caught
To warn; retracted too soon to be heard.
The light was gone, the sky was still, and space
Receded, leaving void instead of flame;
And time, a jealous monarch, in the place
Of void and neverness without a name.
Your eyes have leashed that wild eternity
No death can conquer, no mere time set free.

Alchemy

With neutral eye untuned to sympathy
I watched the steady passing of my time
As silent water moving to a sea,
As iteration of the constant rhyme
Of sun and moon, and of the night and day.
Joy was not long-lived, nor did sorrow reach
Beyond the mind where sorrow will not stay.
Wisdom I did not learn, nor wisdom teach.
But now I find that water often sings
And that its course is intricate and strange;
That stars are young, that sun and moon are things
I did not know, and knowing would not change;
That disappointment wounds and sorrow burns;
That he who never teaches never learns.

Zendik

Some others, too, have loved as much as I,
But cynics all have prophesied their hate,
Or their forgetting, which they laid to fate
And with a shrug retold the ancient lie.
Most willingly I would have joined with those
Who search their happiness in such a way
And find it somewhere, keep it for a day,
Then drop it as one drops a time-bleached rose.
I shall not seek them, wonder at their word—
From you must come all happiness of mine;
My joy shall not be theirs, a wingless bird;—
This is my prophesy, my cryptic line;
If you forget, it shall not change. I know
Death's narrowed eyes will find it even so.

IN TIME OF WAR

HELEN ZABOKRTSKY

She stood alone. Not at all tall, but seemingly she towered above the crowd around her, with that look in her eyes that a sailor has when he is alone gazing at an angry sea. She stood apparently unseeing, unhearing, as if there were none near—as if she were the supreme tribune reviewing all the ages past. Then she smiled, remembering what her father had always quoted when she had been hurt or unhappy: "That has passed o'er; this also will pass." She murmured it again. Then slowly, lingeringly her eyes drew away from the far distances, and dispassionately passed over her tormentors. Like an aged and weary goddess she stood there courageously undaunted, dominating the others—Mary Ann, ten years old.

Very fair, her hair almost white in the brilliant sun-light, small for a ten-year-old, gray-eyed, with the most amazing hands; not the chubby dimpled hands of childhood, but hands of a fascinating long slenderness; creative, spiritual, and very beautiful.

Young as the first spring, people thought when they first saw her. They would catch their breaths wonderingly, for she was youth—happy, light-hearted, childish youth. And then if she looked into their eyes their hearts paused amazed and suddenly rushed like beating wings, for her eyes, her laughing eyes held sorrow, pity, and an all-encompassing understanding. They made people feel that they could bring their own petty woes—for those calm gray eyes showed them that their troubles were petty—and that just having her listen would make everything right. Then the gray eyes would turn to other things, and people would shrug and wonder at themselves for their weakness. But to those who had greater souls, the understanding hearts, would come a great desire to weep. Those laughing eyes were sad. More sad than the eyes of the oldest philosopher.

The other children always leagued against her. They might and did fight among themselves, but against her they were united. They liked her, yes. They fought to have her on their side in games. She was surprisingly good at games. But they were vaguely afraid of her; and so, among themselves they called her "goody-goody" and "teacher's pet." It wasn't anything they could define. It was—well, they would mutter, "She's too good."

She never lied; not even to get them out of trouble. She wouldn't lie for herself. The gray eyes would glance at them if they asked her to do such a thing and the children would become fidgety. Then they would squirm and point out that there wasn't a chance that she wouldn't be believed, but she simply said, "Dad wouldn't want me to be a coward. He says people only lie when they're afraid. I'm not afraid." This, however, wasn't quite true. She was afraid—often, yet she kept on being brave. Her father was brave. She must be brave, too.

She was different from the rest of the children. They knew it, their parents remarked it, and she saw that difference too, but none of them knew why.

Many evenings, after their houses had become quiet, the neighbors would speak of her. The fathers liked her and would wish their daughters were like her because—oh, they didn't know why, but she made a man feel rested and at peace. Then the mothers would become indignant. They would forget the times they had held Mary Ann up as a model for their children to pattern after, and they would say she was a queer one. They would say she gave herself airs and that her father was that way too. Sly, they would call them in their anger, because they knew when they looked into the eyes of Mary Ann and her father that they, the good, respected citizens, were little and mean. And at last they had something they could definitely disapprove. The women remarked it constantly, joyfully, and the men left off championing Mary Ann and her father.

America had entered the war. The war to make the world safe for democracy. Feeling ran high. Men hurried to enlist. Those who were too old sent their sons. Only a few waited for the draft. None questioned the rightness of the war or the principle of war—none but Mary Ann's father. He did not enlist. At first people excused him by saying that he did have to take care of Mary Ann. But when they suggested delicately that they would take Mary Ann if he wanted to go, they were horrified to hear him say that war was wrong; that all war, every war was wrong; a relic of barbarism; that it would not make the world safe for democracy but for dictatorships and communists; that it would not end war but breed hatred, jealousy, and distrust which would lead to other wars. After that they avoided Mary Ann and her father. Children were called home if they played with Mary Ann, but apparently she did not mind, and she and her father repeated, "That has passed o'er, this also will pass."

Then Mary Ann's father refused the draft. Afterward some officers took him away, and an aunt came to stay with Mary Ann.

Mary Ann didn't understand why her aunt hated her father, and said such bitter things about him, or why the neighbors sneered at him and ignored her, or why the children called her names. Her father was, without any question in her mind, right—of course he was. So she had gone her way alone proudly.

The children took to following her in the streets, calling names. They stood around her house calling names, and now they had surrounded her, shouting.

"Mary Ann's a coward!"

"Mary Ann's a coward!"

"Mary Ann's a coward!"

They terrified her, shouting and jumping around her, but she stood there facing them. Her father wouldn't want her to run. She had never run! For a minute she seemed to see him saying, "Always face things, Mary Ann. The hardest thing is most often the thing to do. Don't run away from hard things. Remember other hard things have passed, so will all hard things go by. If you face things something will tell you the right thing to do. Remember, Mary Ann." And then he had gone.

Her eyes turned from the face of one tormentor to another. Those wise, pitying, gray eyes. The children paused a minute and then fell back a step before they again shrieked:

"Mary Ann's a coward!"

"Mary Ann's a coward!"

"Because her father is a coward!"

"Mary Ann's father is yellow!"

"Mary Ann's father is yel—!"

The chant broke suddenly. Mary Ann was laughing. Laughing.

The children sneaked away, for it wasn't any fun to tease a person if the person didn't mind.

Unseeing, unhearing, Mary Ann stood alone.

A RAINY DAY

FRANCES SHERMAN

Smoky, soggy, sooty smell;
Streams in the gutters run pell-mell;
Soaked and dripping the buildings stand,
And squat down flat at the sky's command.

MUSKEGON RIVER

(A Song of Timber)

DAVID S. SAVLER

I: Wilderness

It started,
a tiny, trickling muddy creek
that ventured into the wood timidly from a broad and shimmering, lonely lake fast bound by shaggy virgin pine.
Into the fearful, deadly silence of the forest
it advanced, garnering courage, and made for itself a pathway, banked with moss.

They tell a tale
around the camp-fire.
A tale of many, many years ago,
of a desolate hunter and trapper, a Chippewa
who searched the barren woods in vain for game
by the headwaters of the Muskegon.
His father, so the story goes,
was held a captive by an enemy
who had set a price for the sage's freedom.
The skins of the beaver, the otter, the deer could ransom the chief. His son set out in search of game, but winter with snow and ice that tried men's strength and searched their souls, set in.
Vainly he kept his vigil, no creature stirred or dared to venture in that penetrating cold,
and then his time was up, and he returned,
empty-handed, and his father died.
Manitou, thou hast mercy, yet art so cruel!

The creek flowed onward, shouldering its way,
thrusting its banks apart, quickening,
widening, it became a swift river
that rolled on between the trees of the forest
a winding shaft of silver cutting the woodland it meandered, until its banks parted into another glassy, dune-set lake,— through a narrow channel, and then behold! The sandy shore, the surf, the whitecaps, the far horizon of an inland sea.

II: Timber

Bang! the crack of the white man's gun
as the forests of Michigan see the sun.
The axe bites into the oak and the ash,
and lofty pine trees fall with a crash
as sweating men split ties for the railroad.
Thrusting into Michigan, the Grand Trunk railroad.
Here is the thick-set timber line
with forests of cedar and birch and pine.
The world needs timber to turn its cogs
so the Muskegon River is cluttered with logs.
Faster now, setting the pace that kills
as timber goes roaring down to the mills.
Four-masted schooner heads out in the lake dipping and leaving a choppy wake,
bucking toward Chicago with a deck-load of timber.
Iron locomotive, grim and black
belching smoke and sparks from its stack,
chugging to Detroit with its carloads of timber.
Timber from Michigan,
timber from Maine;
hewing the forests out of the plain.
Timber for houses,
timber for ships;
"Timber!" the cry on all men's lips.
(*That was the cry when three men died.
A key-log loose from a jam they pried,
were rolled and mashed in the river bed,
and Hackley counted three men dead.*)
Oh, work in lumber, get drunk when you're paid,
at Muskegon, center of the lumber trade.
Though a jam or side-winder may strike you dead,
It's work, my man, and you earn your bread!

The rule of the tooth
the rule of the claw.
The axe and gun was the lumberman's law.

When the foreman got tough, it wasn't fun.
His temper was quick and he carried a gun.
It hung on his belt; he was quick at the pull
a long-barreled forty-four, six chambers full.
For no man's life did he give a damn,
but he knew his stuff as a lumbering man
and he floated them down with scarce a jam.
But even the strongest have their fall. . . .
Jim was a youngster, six feet tall,

and husky, too, just built for a brawl.
In a fight,—on Jimmy they'd place their bet.
There was trouble when Jim and the foreman met!
Jim hated the man and he said so, too,
he didn't give a damn if anyone knew.
He would see the foreman straight to Hell
and he had reasons he wouldn't tell.
The spark was lit;
it started soon
in Newaygo town in a board saloon.

*(In a fight,—on Jimmy they'd place their bet
There was trouble when Jim and the foreman met!
—It swung on his hip, he was quick at the pull
a long-barreled forty-four, six chambers full.
Don't let that deadly fight begin when they're lubricated with rum and gin!)*

But fate was fate and they met that night.
The cause was a woman.—

Jim started the fight
With a cross-cut left and a hammering right.
Then like two tigers loose from a cage,
clutched throats and grappled in maddened rage,
when bang!——

"Damn you, don't stand there dense!
He's dead. I shot him in self defense."
On self-defense he made his plea.
The case was dismissed and he went free.
But man's own conscience must take its course;
the foreman was stung with bitter remorse.
He could not sleep;
he could not think.
He tried to drown it in heavy drink,
till he reeked of pungent molasses rum
and he lost his job as a drunken bum.

Timber was cut;
timber was milled.
It mattered not whether men were killed.
Though widows wept in Muskegon town,
still the timber kept roaring down.
Shot down the log slide
streamed down the river
sang through the saw-mills.
Work in lumber, get drunk when you're paid
at Muskegon, center of the lumber trade.
Though a jam (or a foreman) may strike you dead,
it's work, my man, and you earn your bread!

III: Wilderness Again

A gravel road well beat by auto wheel,
meets the Muskegon, flowing on serene.
And leaps the waters with a bridge of steel,
on which I stand and contemplate the scene.
The current flows beneath me and it drags
its swirling waters on along the way.
On over rotten logs and sunken snags
decaying relics of another day.
Below me, I can see the river bed
mud brown, and there a blackened water-log.
A watersnake uncoils and rears its head,
a tiny splash, there goes the fleeing frog.
No longer do the logs roar down the stream
so once again can nature reign supreme.

See the deserted farmhouse, battered gray.
The tenant of the place had tried in vain
to bring forth grain from lifeless sand and clay,
and failed and left; did not return again.
From this deep sand pit see a glinting sheet
of azure blue, a tiny sylvan lake.
If you call out, three echoes will repeat from its dark shores and mystic silence break.
Gaze from this hilltop over miles of trees
small, second-growth with thick grown underbrush and prairie grass, soft rolling in the breeze
unmarked by man, yet near the city's rush.
So near, and yet remote from haunts of men,
resolving into wilderness again.

No longer does the lumber schooner run
before the wind, a-coursing down the lake,
great heavy ore-boats of ten thousand ton
trample the waves and leave a boiling wake.
Frame structures are torn down and girders rise
where timbers stood now mounts the stone on steel,
and lofty towers strive to reach the skies
inspired by man's materialistic zeal.
Men in their search for timber have gone on,
have turned the woods to prairies, left them bare hew down the titan pine of Oregon:
deplete, reforest with but slipshod care.
The cry of "Timber!" from the woodland, fast grows fainter mid the echoes of the past.

WALDO FERRIS

PIERRE MARSHALL

"I seed yer a-lookin' at ol' woman, yonder. By the blacksmithin' place. That's ol' Hepzibah Ferris, come down ter sell a shoat er suthin' ter townfolks, I reckon. Ain't seed her myself fer quite a spell—goin' on three year. Ain't quite so peart an' lively as she were five year back, 'fore ol' Waldo died an' made her a widder-woman.

"I said died, though ther's a heap more to hit than that. Make pretty good story-tellin' for bookwritin' folks, I calcalate. Course ther's plenty in this town, an' in them mountings yonder, that'd be plenty riled by me a-tellin' all these doin's ter a furriner like you-all, but I ain't as ignernt ner as narrer as mos' o' these hill-people. I been outside the mountings in my time. Worked nigh eight year in a fact'ry up ter Nashville.

"Well, ter git on 'bout Ol' Man Ferris—hit don't seem like no time at all since I used ter see he-un ev'ry Friday mawnin', regler as sun-up an' sundown. He come down from his cabin on Ol' Turtle Mounting yonder, ter buy sugar er tobaccer er suthin'. He'd go a-lumpin' up the lane thar, with his ol' bushy head o' white ha'r a-floatin' an' wavin' in the wind like yaller fur on a bobcat's tail. 'Pears like that white ha'r were 'bout the easies' thing ter see 'bout Ol' Waldo Ferris—that an' his blazin' blue eyes.

"He hed two boys, twinses they was, name o' Bart an' Tate. When them two was little fellers, they was so much alike a body couldn't tell 'em 'part nohow. Both on 'em was as chipper an' sassy as a pair o' young 'possums. They was 'bout twice as wild, an' three times as ornery as mos' boys, I reckon.

"I 'member one time they was down ter town, an' a-playin' 'roun' the smith-shop yonder. Bart Ferris heaved a rock at a hoss that were bein' shod an' the critter kicked Tod Winslow, the smith, pret' nigh through the wall. Well, I reckon Tod would o' kilt Bart right then only Ol' Waldo happened ter come pas', an' he jes' stood a-starin' at Tod ontel he-un slunk off—ter ketch the hoss, he said. Course Waldo hed his ol' rifle-gun with him, but folks reckoned hit were more his eyes that scairt Winslow, than hit. Both the boys hed them eyes, too. Like splinters o' blue ice. Well, then Ol' Waldo kind o' riz up an' fotched Bart a crack 'long side the head that would o' split a oak-wood timber.

"As I say, them two boys was pretty much of a kind, ontel they was 'bout fifteen. Jes' 'bout that time Tate got took down sick one day. 'Pendicitis, Doc Harkness called hit, an' he 'lowed hit were pretty uncommon 'mongst us mounting-folks. He said they'd hev ter tote Tate up ter Knoxville fer operatin'—Doc Harkness didn't do much studyin' 'bout cuttin' an' still ain't no shakes with a knife far's I know.

"Well, that trip up ter Knoxville were the changin' place in Tate Ferris's life, I reckon. You see, he hadn't never been no further'n Sweetwater before, an' his pappy an' his pappy's pappy hadn't set much store on travellin' neither. But when Tate got up thar in that city an' saw the street-cars an' autymobiles an' all, he jes' nacherly made up his mind that he warn't a-goin' ter be no hillbilly.

"When he come back, hit 'peared like he'd already got him a little book-larnin' from the nurses an' sech, an' he were a-rarin' ter git more.

"Well, now, o' course Ol' Waldo were dead set agin hit. He 'lowed he didn't want no young-un smarter'n hisself. An' brother Bart kind o' sniggered at Tate's hifalutin' notions, too. But Tate, he knew what he-un wanted, an' he were a-goin' ter git hit, too, er bust. He used ter slip down ter town as often as he could, not havin' many chores anyhow, an' would go in ter see the schoolmarm.

"Tate didn't hev much workin' ter do, 'cause Waldo never raised hisself nothin' but a measly little patch o' corn—fer whiskey. Some boys would o' hed ter stay ter home an' hoe tobaccer, but Ol' Waldo were so shif'less that he let the stragglin' little patch he had peter out long ago. 'Peared like he'd ruther hunt er fish. He were a great feller fer goin' coonin' as I ricollec'.

"Well, Tate would sometimes even set in with the little town childern, an' read fairy-tales, er sech-like trash. An' whenever Ol' Waldo ketched him at hit he would give him a whalin', but hit never done no good, fer Tate were jes' as stubborn as his pappy.

"Him an' Bart war'n't seed tergether so much after that, an' Bart an' the Ol' Man 'sociated tergether pretty much o' the time. Tate kind o' quieted down, an' war'n't as noisy ner as ornery as he used ter be, but ther war'n't nobody could han'-throw him in a wrassle-fight, er make him holler 'Nuff' in a rough-an'-tumble. Nobody 'cept Bart, an' they was 'bout even mos' o' the time.

"Well, hit 'peared Tate were kind o' more intrusted in the outside now. He used ter walk all the way ter Sweetwater oncet a week, ter git him a Nashville paper. He kep' on a-footin' hit until he saved him up enough from trappin' wintertimes ter git a ol' third-han' busted flivver. That were the firs' autymobile that were ever seed in this town, I reckon.

"Hit were in one o' them Nashville papers, I guess, that he larned 'bout the war that were a-bein' fit over in Europe, an'

'bout how Ameriky were a-gittin' inter hit. Anyhow, he come home one night, an' got him some extry socks an' his ol' squirrel-gun, an' 'lowed as how he'd 'listed fer the army up ter Sweetwater, an' were a-goin' off ter fight agin the Germans.

"Ol' Waldo Ferris like ter went crazy-mad 'bout these doin's. He 'lowed he'd let his boy grow up ter be a muley-calf with his book-larnin' an' all, an' he'd stood fer his gittin' the rattlin' ol' Ford (with his own money), but he said he were gol-thunderin' damned ef he were a-goin' ter stan' by an' see him go off ter fight people which lived hundreds of miles away maybe, an' which he'd never even seed.

"Howsomever, Tate went off ter war, an' Ol' Waldo jes' hed ter set back on his haunches an' fergit 'bout hit. He come down ter town next day, an' he swore high an' low that ef he ever seed his chuckle-headed son agin, he were a-goin' ter plug him.

"Ol' Hepzibah Ferris got kind o' peaked after Tate lef' though, fer she allus loved him the bes' o' the two, I reckon. Bart were too much like his pappy, an' lan's knows he hadn't led her no easy life. Tate used ter help his mammy in the corn sometimes, an' I know fer sartin that he gave her a dollar oncet ter buy goods fer a dress.

"The Ol' Man an' Bart was seed tergether more'n ever now, an' folks could pretty soon see that Bart were jes' as ornery as his pappy. He used ter come down here sometimes, full o' corn-whiskey, an' folks would jes' 'bout lock up house an' put up shutter, ontel he got past.

"He caught pore ol' Jerd Larkin oncet, an' made him wrassle-fight. Jerd war'n't more'n five-foot-six, an' Bart were as big as a pine tree. Well, Bart throwed him, an' busted three o' his ribs, an' then gouged out his lef' eye. He were drunk as a nigger all the time, an' Jerd hadn't done him no spite.

"Well, I reckon I ought to tell you-un

'bout the corn-whiskey makin'. 'Pears like furrin folks thinks we-uns don't do nothin' but make us licker, an' then set down an' drink hit up er sell hit. Now that ain't true at all. Course, mounting-folks makes whiskey, an' lots on 'em drinks hit, but hardly ever 'nough ter git as drunk as lots o' fellers I seed up ter Nashville. An' one thing I want you-un ter understand is that us folks don't never sell our whiskey, onless we're jes' low down er ornery like them two Ferrises. Mounting-folks air homely people, an' when a feller wants a stan' o' grub er a drink o' whiskey, we give hit ter him, not sell hit.

"Now, when news got 'roun' these parts 'bout the Pro'bition law that Congress-folks an' the Gov'ment had got up, we-uns didn't study much 'bout hit, fer we figured that as long as we jes' drunk 'mongst ourselves, an' behaved an' all, Gov'ment war'n't a-goin' ter pester us none.

"But Pro'bition didn't strike Ol' Waldo Ferris thataway, ner Bart Ferris neither. No indeedy. The Ol' Man, he come a-rantin' an' a-ragin' down here an' sweared that by shudderin' thunder, Gov'ment er nobody else were a-goin' ter put no chains on he-un. An' that was the night Bart Ferris got drunk an' burnt down Hart Jenkins' barn with all the stock inside o' hit.

"Well, Bart an' the Ol' Man, they went an' dug up er made 'bout nine jug o' whiskey, an' hit were pretty meller stuff, fer he-un poured out fer we-uns down ter the store. I 'member Ol' Uncle Benny Parsons drunk some, an' he must o' got a little too much, for he 'clared his wooden leg were turned into Injun-rubber, an' he couldn't b'ar ter set foot on hit. That were the leg he hed shot offen him at Chattanooga, an' Gov'ment allus gave him a pension fer hit.

"Them two Ferrises, they put that licker inter the back o' Tate's ol' flivver an' 'lowed they was a-goin' ter tote hit over ter

Sweetwater an' sell hit, an' show Gov'ment suthin'.

"An' they done hit, too. Fer I heerd a feller from Sweetwater tell 'bout hit. Anse Phelps, my niece's husban'. He said they-uns come a-rattlin' inter town, an' got out their licker on a street corner an' offered ter sell hit fer ten cents a glass. They was doin' real good, too, ontel the town marshal come up, an' started ter bullyraggin' they-uns an' a-tellin' them ter git out o' town. An' then Bart jumped the marshal, an' throwed him an' were a-fixin' ter gouge him, but other folks started ter pile inter the fight, an' hit got ter be a regler riot. Well, fin'ly Ol' Waldo an' Bart seed they better cut stick an' run, so they done hit.

"Now you'd o' thought that would o' suited mos' folks, but it didn't Ol' Waldo, ner Bart neither. They kep' on a-sellin' licker, but they knowed better'n ter try hit on the curb-stone no more. They had regler folks which bought from they-uns, an' they didn't make much noise 'bout their goin's-on.

"Now all this time, Tate Ferris, who'd gone off ter France, hadn't been seed by nobody, an' hit 'peared like he war'n't never a-comin' home no more. Course, hit were properly a good thing, fer there would o' been trouble mos' like, 'bout the way them two was actin'.

"Well, they kep' hit up fer pret' nigh seven year, a-makin' whiskey an' a-sellin' hit ter townfolks. An' they never 'peared ter have no trouble neither, though folks was allus a-jawin' 'bout revynoo men er the milishy.

"But when they-uns hit trouble, they shore hit it thick. Happened one time when Bart were a-totin' a load over ter Sweetwater, an' was hel' up near Hardin, by a Gov'ment man. Trouble was, the Gov'ment man were alone, an' he didn't know Bart Ferris. He tried ter hol' his pistol-gun on Bart an' look inter the back seat

o' the car at the same time. Hit war'n't the ol' flivver no more, fer Waldo'd got hisself a better one. Well, Bart he got the Gov'ment man in the side o' the head with a wrench. When he seed how the feller were layin' an' bleedin' he got scairt an' lit out fer home. Some folks a-comin' up the pike foun' the feller afterwards, an' he were deader'n a taller candle.

"Well, Ol' Waldo an' Bart didn't study 'bout no more lickin' sellin' jest then, an' as a matter o' fack Bart tooken his rifle-gun an' hid out in the hills. But I reckon they figgered Gov'ment couldn't locate they-uns nohow, fer the ol' man come down in the car, 'bout four day later, ter git salt. He went inter the store, an' lef' the autymobile a-settin' outside. While he were in thar, seven er eight state milishymen come ridin' up in a big black car with side blinders onter hit.

"They-uns piled out, an' then I seed that Gov'ment were pretty smart, fer they'd tooken a picter o' the tire marks by the dead man an' now they was a-settin' hit by the tires on Ol' Waldo's machine.

"I was a-settin' on the ellum stump yonder, an' I seed 'em look up an' go a-runnin' inter the store hellbent fer 'lection. Well, in 'bout three seconds things started poppin' in thar. Sounded like the las' trump o' Gabriel. 'Peared like Ol' Waldo seed 'em drive up, an' hed got all sot fer 'em back o' the counter. When they come in he got him two, an' winged another with his pistol-gun, an' then while they was shootin' right an' lef' an' missin', he hopped out the back winder.

"The Ol' Man lit out fer the hills an' I seed the milishymen come out o' the store a-carryin' two, whiles another had aholt o' his shoulder an' was a-cussin' a blue streak.

"Course now Gov'ment were pretty anxious ter git them two fellers, father an' son, fer what they'd did, so the whole kit an' bilin' o' the milishy come roarin' back in army trucks, a-ragin' an' swearin' suthin' awful. Reckon ther was two hundred on 'em. Then they spread out in the hills like houn'-dogs arter a 'coon.

"Wall, I figgered hit were 'bout all up with the 'coons, but I reckoned that the boun's would be in a mighty rough spot when they did git 'em treed. So I were kind o' hankerin' ter see the end o' this hunt, fer I knowed ther'd shore be doin's.

"I got out my string an' feather an' oiled up my ol' squirrel-gun that aft'noon an' went out to the hills ter see ef I could git me a 'coon, but I were arter real 'coons.

"I snuck 'long in them woods fer a matter o' two hour 'fore I spied a single milishyman, but when I fin'ly run inter 'em ther shore was plenty. They pret' nigh plugged me, a-thinkin' I were Bart er suthin'.

"Wall, I 'lowed I might as well traipse 'long with they-uns now, so I follered 'em 'long a gulley er ditch they was a-travelin' in.

"Pretty soon I seed a place where hit were rough goin', but where I could cut off some foot-trampin', so I went through thar. Hit were a cut I used in winter-time when I were a-huntin' rabbits. Shot me a b'ar thar, in the winter o' '97. Them milishymen kep' on in the gulley, crashin' 'long like bulls o' Bashan.

"Wall, arter 'bout fifteen minutes I cut back inter that gulley agin, but now I were ahead o' the milishy. An' I were kind o' surprised ter see a feller in khaki a good piece ahead o' me. He must o' knowed that cut-off, too.

"In a few minutes that gulley jes' kind o' petered out, an' there were a sort o' clearin'. That milishyman kep' on a-goin' but I stopped at the edge ter git my wind.

"When he were 'bout centerwise the clearin' I seed a feller in a yaller shirt bust out o' the bushes near th' milishyman, an' go a-runnin' at him. He were runnin' sort o' catty-cornered ter the sojer from the lef' side in back o' him. I seed the feller were Bart Ferris, an' I reckon he were plumb crazy-mad fer he were a-wavin' a skinnin' knife, an' didn't have nothin' else fer fightin' tools.

"The milishyman 'peared ter hear jes' in time, an' 'fore I could holler ter he-un, he spun 'roun', surprised-like, an' caught Bart slap on his bay'net. Bart squalled like a hog at killin' time, an' thumped on the groun' with the knife still in his han'. I seed the milishyman ben' over Bart ter look at he-un, with his back towards me, an' then he kind o' straightened up quick.

"Jest then the bushes moved at the foot o' the hill, over back o' the sojer, an' Ol' Man Ferris stuck out his wavin' white head, an' the sun glanced offen his rifle-gun bar'l. An' even in that little piece o' second 'fore he pulled trigger, I seed them eyes o' his'n blazin' like torches. 'N en' he fired shot 'fore I could beller. It all happened so quick, nobody could o' hol-lered nohow. One minute I seed the ol' devil pop up, an' the next I seed the milishyman spin 'roun', throw up his han's, an' fall plumb on his face!

"The Ol' Man ran out, rifle-gun a-smokin'. He looked at Bart, an' seed he were dead, an' then he turned over the milishyman with his foot.

"When he done that, my throat-strings stuck, an' my ha'r riz up like wires, fer a-seein' the sojer face-up fer the firs' time, now, I seed that he couldn't be told from Bart! Ol' Waldo Ferris had kilt his own son Tate, all unknowin'. An' Tate hed mos' likely come ter warn 'em!

"When the Ol' Man seed what he'd did, he groaned like a crippled deer. His mouth flopped open, an' his knee-joints sagged in, an' he went down on ter his knee-bones, eyes up ter Heaven an' white ha'r a-hangin' 'bout his shoulders.

"'N 'en I heard the rest o' the milishy a-tearin' 'long the gully. They'd heard the shot. Ol' Waldo must o' heard the sojers, too, fer he sprung ter his feet, an' looked.

"Them milishymen come a-runnin' inter the clearin' pas' me, an' went a-chargin' at Waldo with their bay'nets. He bent down an' snatched the skinnin' knife from Bart's dead han', an' crouched back like a moccasin coiled fer strikin'. The milishymen stopped dead, fer the Ol' Man looked like Satan hisself, peerin' out through his cloud o' white ha'r with them blazin', boilin' blue eyes, an' clutchin' that knife.

"But all on a sudden-like, he stretched out that broad-blade stabber an' jammed hit plumb inter his own chest, 'fore they could breathe!

"Wall, that were how Ol' Waldo Ferris come ter die."

TORCH LAKE

EMILY SHEPARD

It is a starry midsummer night in 1800. I lean against one of the many birches, silently looking across the still water of a beautiful little lake in the north. Suddenly I become aware of the stealthy rhythm of Indian paddles coming to me across the water. Three canoes carrying Indian braves glide cautiously around a bend. By the flare of the birch torches which the warriors carry, I can see that it is a fishing party. Soon two more canoes come from across the lake. They, too, have torches to attract the white fish. By midnight the lake is dotted with many lights. Slowly, the vision fades and one by one the flaming brands go out.

The stars are just coming out on a warm summer night in 1931. All is quiet as I stand beside a lovely lake in Northern Michigan. White birches still fringe the banks. Through the hazy night I can barely distinguish the rolling hills across the still waters. A peaceful village nestles there. As I gaze across the inky water, in the shadowy distance I see the torch in the bow of a lonely fisherman's boat. Now, one by one, the lights in the village blink out.

BATHING THE DOG

RUBY HENSON

There are two things which must be done to give any dog a bath: first, you must catch him; and second, you must wash him. The first is by far the hardest to do. Anyone can bathe a dog, but it takes an expert to catch one. As soon as the words "dog's dirty" and "bath" are mentioned, the ears of the canine drop and his tail sinks between his legs. Then he backs around the table and makes a dive under the bed. You promptly go down on your hands and knees, thrust your head under the counterpane, and croon sweet words to the pooch. But he is usually not in a loving mood. First, he looks at you, and then settles down as if for a nap. But when you reach out to grab any clutchable spot he eludes you, and makes a mad dash from under the bed.

Now it will take three people to corner him. Perhaps with much coaxing and tempting with his favorite food (dogs usually prefer liver or candy) the beast can be brought around and you can carry him off in triumph. More often than not, however, he will lead you a merry chase, knowing that in the end he must submit to the inevitable.

The rest of it is easy. You just dump the dog in a tub of water and scrub him hard. Be sure and get soap in his eyes and duck him a few times. This will pay him back for playing hide and seek with you. But beware when the bath is over and the dog is put down. He will plant himself beside you and shake for all he is worth, for revenge is sweet.

THE JUNGLE

FRANCES SHERMAN

I wish I lived in a jungle, the jungle of my dreams,
With a hot sun frowning downward, as golden as I please,
Making a yellow pattern among the dark green leaves.

I want to live in a jungle where jungle-
bugs are seen;
And moss upon the tree-trunks, where lizzards dart between;
And gaudy parrots chatter, all pink and gold and green.

JULY

FRANCES SHERMAN

The weather was so very warm
That only the moon was cold;
I envied her as she hung in the sky,
A ball of frozen gold.

A fortnight of such weather passed;
I noticed, day by day
That even she, whom I thought so cold,
Was melting fast away.

PANIC

LOIS STINSON

He walked tensely and nervously down the street. At his back, there was an arc light. Ahead of him, there was darkness.
The wind blew in fitful gusts, and the bushes along the walk swayed. The moon alternately shone brightly, and was hidden by a cloud. He began to whistle a merry tune to himself, and increased his pace.
Now and then a falling leaf from the trees above touched his head. Anxiously,
he looked back and saw his own shadow.
Again his pace quickened. His whistling became breathless. As his heart began to beat madly, the whistling ceased. He ran, swiftly and fearfully, down the street.

PRIZE LETTER

JEAN BUCHANAN

Splemo Cigar Company
820 57th Street
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Splemo:

I guess you're surprised to get a letter from a woman about "What Splemo Cigars mean to me," that is, if you've looked at the signature yet, but I really have quite a story to tell. Two hundred words is much too short, though, but you surely won't mind if I make it a little long.

Well, to begin with, my husband is Assistant Sales Manager of the Simlin Button Company. Mr. Simmons is the real head of the firm, and Mr. Lindbergh (he's no relation to Lindy) is the silent partner. Bill (that's my husband) is just twenty-nine—his birthday was on July 6, but we celebrated on the fourth, on account of it's a holiday anyway—and I consider he's done very well, because he started in at the very bottom. Mr. Simmons looks like an old bear, and he's always chewing on a big fat cigar.

We decided to have Mr. and Mrs. Simmons over for bridge, on Bill's birthday, because that is what men always do when they want to be promoted. Bill told me so. And he should be promoted, too, because he got the shirt factory's account all by himself.

I couldn't decide what to get for Bill, because he has plenty of ties, and he doesn't like my choice of shirts, but when Dad was over a few nights before the party, I got an idea. He handed Bill a cigar, puffing all over, and said:

"The boss passed these around to a bunch of the boys the other day at conference—hrumph—they cost fifty cents apiece."

Bill smoked it, and seemed to like it. In fact, he said, "That's some cigar—I never smoked anything like it in my life." So I decided to get Bill a box of them, and sneaked a look at the label. It said Splemo.

The next day I went to the drug store to get a box of them. Imagine my surprise when that peroxide blonde (personally, I don't think she's nice—I caught her flirting with Bill one day) said "Three for a quarter." I asked her if there was a sale on cigars that day, and she said no, so I hurried away without saying any more, and credited it to Profit and Loss on my budget—that's what Bill told me to do when I made a bargain.

That night, at dinner, Bill acted so queer that I asked him what was the matter, dear.

"It was that blank cigar of your father's." Bill didn't say blank, but I don't consider it proper for a lady to use such language, though it's quite all right for a man to swear mildly once in a while.

Anyway, I was astounded to hear it. "Why, Bill," I cried, "I thought you liked it. You said—"

"I said I never tasted anything like them. They were awful. They cost fifty cents—in my eye."

I opened my mouth to tell him about the peroxide blonde, but changed my mind and closed it. The next day I went down and bought him a lovely blue silk shirt.

I wanted him to wear the shirt for the party, because he admired it tremendously, but he said Mr. Simmons once told him never to wear blue, because it made him look bilious. We decided to change it for a white broadcloth, because, as Bill said, it is best to forget personal likes and dislikes in the interests of business.

The dinner went off lovely, except for the potatoes, which I scorched a little, but Mrs. Simmons said she thought a little burnt was good for a body. She is a lovely person.

Mr. Simmons and I were partners, and somehow we couldn't win a game. I must say that for a big man Mr. Simmons is a poor loser. He positively lost his temper when I trumped his king. However, I was very sweet and serene to him through it all, remembering about Bill's career.

Then, to make it worse, his cigars, which he smoked at the rate of one a game, ran out. When we told him there wasn't a drug store within walking distance, he was all for calling up his chauffeur and going home. Bill was frantic, and it was most uncomfortable, when I remembered the Splomos. I excused myself and ran upstairs to get them. When I was coming down, Bill waylaid me in the hall, and took one look at the cigars.

"Just as I expected. You'll ruin me if you let him smoke one of those."

"Well, it couldn't be much worse. Of all the nasty old men—"

"I don't suppose you had anything to do with it. Why in blank did you have to trump that ace?"

I could feel the tears coming to my eyes. "It wasn't an ace—it was a king."

"All right, all right, take them in, and stop crying."

I never saw anything like the way that old man cheered up when he got the cigars—it was like giving a baby a pacifier. It just happened they were the brand he smoked, and he liked them so much that Bill changed his mind and smoked one, too.

He sat and chatted for the rest of the evening and Mr. Simmons brought up the subject of the raise without any prompting. When they left he congratulated Bill on having such a charming wife. He really is quite nice.

So you see how indebted I am to your cigars—if I were a man I'd always smoke them, no matter how bad they are.

Sincerely,

Lucy Blandish.

P. S. Don't bother sending me the prize. In these hard times I think we all ought to help those who need it. L. B.

OUT OF THE DEEP

WALLACE PETERS

The water rippled on the rocks like the ruffles on a silk skirt. Stars danced and shimmered on the unfathomed deep. Phosphorus blinked and glimmered in the wavelets as they broke over the glossy stones on the shore.

The light cut through the night and flashed on the water far from the shore. Presently two greedy eyes shone; glittering, searching curiously for the source of that dazzling attraction. Foot by foot, yard by yard those eyes were gradually drawn closer to shore. Now circling, now disappearing, gleaming wolfishly, so that shivers ran up and down my back. Ever closer and closer those fiendish green eyes were drawn by curiosity towards the beam of light. It was like a dream; the dark night, that treacherous, shadowy body so close that I trembled with fear. A well-aimed, long-practiced, powerful thrust; a struggle that seemed longer than it was, and the dreaded shark lay battling with death—five feet of deadly menace no more.

SOLILOQUY

PRISCILLA ELMER

One friend I have and that most sure: myself.

Alone in all the world my hand's in mine;
My feet in unchanged rhythm walk the gulf

Together; and my soul has but one sign.
My heart bequeaths me every beat my due;
My eyes make twins the mirrored thought
That rises in them slowly; one and two
We share a bed and drink the glass unsought

That's given to us. Ere the earth began
Was signed the contract pledging me to me,
To act a mutual anchor through the span
Of years upon a necessary sea.

And when comes hint of that last destined end,

We'll die together on a breath, my friend.
